Dear Mr. Johnson,

I think there is a difference between thinking for our own attempts at understanding; and presenting; theories as facts to people who trust what they read.

As I said in I think my second book, the way to think is in terms of the lawyer's questions, cui bono. (I think a typo slipped through there!)

If we ask who benefitted from the JFK assasssination, or who could have thought he could, it is not possible to limited the potential candidates. So we can't get very far that way.

Thinking in generalities, I have come to believe that what is most likely is that those behind the crime were those who wanted to change national policy.

Which leaves a considerable number of candidates!

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
